

PIZZARONI RESTAURANT

My name is Michael Douglas and I am a writer for the Easy Critic magazine. I went to the Pizzaroni Restaurant in downtown Minneapolis. When I walked into the restaurant I was very surprised to see how big it was and that it seated 200 people at a time. I was seated at a table that was so clean you could see your reflection in it. The lighting was soft and the atmosphere was comfortable.

I ordered a meatlovers pizza that turned out to be no ordinary pizza. The crust was so thick, that when I took a bite, it tasted like a freshly baked loaf of bread. It wasn't hard as a rock. The sauce was not thick and gooey, but thin and yummy. The cheese tasted like it had been freshly grated, put very generously on the top, and was bubbling off the crust. The meat was mounded on the top and mixed well so that you were able to taste the succulent ingredients.

The waiter was very attentive and replaced my pop before my glass was empty. He brought the pizza to the table piping hot and offered garnishments.

If I were to grade the restaurant I would give it a B+ because the service was very good, there was no waiting for a table and the food was exceptionally prepared.
